

ACCORDING TO THE EPA..
"99% OF ALL HOMES HAVE POOR INDOOR AIR QUALITY..."

Overwhelmingly, medical experts suggest that we drink approximately two quarts of clean water each day to maintain optimum body conditions. In comparison, we inhale approximately 15,000 (or more) quarts of air each day. Although drinking clean water each day is important, how important is it to a healthy lifestyle to consume "clean air"?

- The Environmental Protection Agency estimates that people spend 90% of their time indoors, but that indoor air quality can be two to five times more polluted than outdoor air. Indoor air pollution can threaten the health -- and the lives -- of everyone in your family.
- One ounce of dust contains nearly 42,000 living dust mites. Each mite is expelling 20, disease harboring, fecal pellets every day into the air you breathe..
- A 1987 EPA study concluded that indoor air in the home and at work far outweighs outdoor air as a route of exposure to toxic chemicals.

Your air filtration system needs to be high quality and kept clean not only for your health but also to protect the air conditioning and heating system. A dirty, low quality, or worse yet, no filter at all, can cause your heating and cooling equipment to fail prematurely. Inefficient or dirty air filters also restrict the airflow in your system which results in higher energy bills and increased HVAC repair costs to you. By installing a high efficiency filtration system you're protecting the health of your family and your investment in your heating and cooling equipment.
